

My Dear General: Letters to William Booth from the 21st Century

One hundred years after his promotion to Glory, what would William Booth think of The Salvation Army in the 21st century? In a series of letters to My dear General, this intriguing question is posed by Commissioner Wesley Harris, a retired Salvation Army leader and writer dedicated to keeping his inky fingers on the pulse of the movement. With unique insights into the Founders life and work -- a former private secretary, George Jolliffe, was mentor to the young Wesley Harris -- the letters celebrate William Booths legacy while addressing momentous issues facing The Salvation Army of today. Commissioner Wesley Harris is the author of 11 books with a collective print run of 82,000 copies. He served for 26 years in corps (church) appointments in the United Kingdom before being appointed editor-in-chief and editor of the UK War Cry. After leading The Salvation Army in Scotland, New Zealand and Canada, he has in retirement continued his prolific output of books, articles and poems.
